iD-S64 is a software from the category Softwares des logiciels industriels.Q: Non-local trade in stock market Suppose that a stock is bought at price  $$p_1$  and sold at price  $$p_2$ . If we buy one share at price  $$p_1$  and sell one share at price  $$p_2$ , is that trade considered non-local? My understanding: If two individuals hold a certain quantity of a stock, then a trade is called local if both parties buy/sell their shares from/to each other without incurring a transaction cost. If two parties buy/sell shares but never the same amount, then the trade is considered non-local. Please correct me if my understanding is incorrect. A: You are correct, and the discussion about local or non-local is irrelevant in this context because you aren't really buying or selling shares, you are buying or selling some unit of currency. So, if you sell  $$1$  at  $$2$  per unit, you have just taken  $$1$  from  $$2$ , which is no different than taking  $$1$  from the stock market, except that the quantity is denominated in  $$$ . You can compare that to how an investor makes purchases by debit or credit on an account, or sold by sale to an account. The actual dealer receives funds or account debits at a closing price and does not trade with the customer, or pays a transaction fee to the stock market or other financial network. Millennials are often mocked for their supposed inability to "just deal with it" and, for a long time, the stereotype was true. Millennials were the first demographic who grew up with technology, after all, so they couldn't possibly know what it's like when Snapchat isn't as widely used as Instagram. In retrospect, however, millennials have proven that they are not as apathetic as we thought they were. Millennials Are Fighting Child Labor (Warmly) It's not hard to see that millennials are being the change that they want to see in this world. A recent report from MarketWatch shows that Millennials, particularly those working in tech and media, are leading the way in fighting the high rates of child labor in the clothing industry. From 2017 to 2018, the number of working children in the apparel industry declined by 3.1 percent
